BRILLIANT ROMANCE OF THE

One of the grandest partraitures of a reckless, dashing, and chivalrous Knight of the Heath ever penned will be found in the brilliant new serial remance commenced in the

NEW-YORK MERCURY for March 2d (issued at 12 o'clock to-day, and to be obtained at all news depote), entitled NIGHTSHADE:

THE MASKED ROBBER OF HOUNSLOW HEATH.

A ROMANCE OF THE ROAD.

BY DR. J. H. ROBINSON:

The scenes of this story are laid in "Merrie England," in the times when the proudest of lords and high-horn ladies were wont to speak of successful highwaymen as heroes, and is almost dramatic in its thrilling intensification of such chivalrous and reckless exploits, dashing characters, and grand midnight scenes as made Hounslow Heath famous.

"NIGHTSHADE" abounds in all that is fascinating, entrancing, and bewitching in elegant fiction, while it is imbued with that irresistible genial humor in which its author, Dr. Robinsen, is unequaled. In short, the readers will find in "Nightshade" one of those rare feasts of entrancing and exhibarating ro-

STRONG'S,

"FLECKED was the steed with snowy foam,

But the robber turned not back.
For a cry grose from his heart's best blood
And the foe was on his track.

"A thousand pounds for the turnpike gate?"
He said through his glist ning teeth,
And he rode for life 'mid the hue and cry,
By the lun on the barren heath. His strong hand fell on the brawny throat
Of him whose steed was the heat.
And well it had been for the rider there
If the firm had another guest."

The GREAT TALE OF THE HIGHWAY, entitled NIGHTSHADE.

OF, THE MASKED ROBBER OF HOUSE, OW HEATH. A ROMANCE of the Road, by Dr. J. H. Robinson, will be tready in The NewYork Mesociar at all the new-depote at noon to-day. NightSHADE embraces all that is bewitching in elegant fixion, and will

This argums well for the improving taste and increasing good sense of those who are blessed with families. However it may lack the learning, depth, and scholarly finish of some of our larger monthlies, it is interior to some of them in freshness, variety, or vivacity and for pure and only monality, refinement and delicacy of feeling practical good ense, and a sweet, genial, Christian splitt, it is not extravagant or say that it is superior to them all. It cannot fail to exert a reality influence over the families that are blest with its monthly feits.—New York Evening Foet.
